

Celebrating Women in Supply Chain Leadership

Celebrating Women in Supply Chain Leadership

Celebrating Women in Supply Chain Leadership

Adenike Onasoga

When Adenike first entered the supply chain industry 12 years ago, she wrongly assumed she would be disadvantaged as a woman. However, as time passed, she learned that the supply chain industry was much more than moving around heavy equipment.

As a supply chain professional with a proven track record in supply chain strategy, she has assisted organizations in rethinking their approach and achieving sustainable, profitable, and long-term business growth. Leveraging her expertise in project delivery, Adenike has successfully implemented existing and new technologies to optimize business processes and drive continuous improvement.

Azukaego Chukwuelue

Azukaego Chukwuelue is a highly skilled professional specializing in data analytics and leveraging technology to address commercial challenges, with a specific focus on supply chain management. With 20 years of experience in renowned companies like Kimberly-Clark, Mondelez International, Kraft Foods and Cadbury.

Throughout her career, Azukaego has held leadership positions such as Supply Chain Director at Kimberly-Clark Nigeria and Customer Service and Logistics Lead at Mondelez International.

Uche Ogboi

Uche is the brain behind Lori Systems, the brand powering African logistics and revolutionizing the cargo-transport value chain in frontier markets. Before joining the start-up, Lori Systems was primarily an East African company in two Kenyan cities (Nairobi and Mombasa) and Kampala, the Ugandan capital.

Uche led the expansion of the brand to Nigeria and increased competition in the country's tech-enabled logistics sector. Despite the evident challenges in the logistics sector, Uche continues to explore the power of digital technology to make a difference in the industry. She introduced real-time information on goods and trucking assets through web-based apps and continues to stun clients.

Izin Akioya

A serial Entrepreneur, Marketing Expert, and Author, Izin's garment manufacturing and export business unlocked her interest in cross-border logistics and the formation of exports, a tech start-up digitizing freight forwarding, e-commerce shipping, and cross-border mobility on the African continent.

Her interest in facilitating trade and export performance for made-in-Africa brands was the driving force behind her co-founding Supply Chain Africa, where she doubles as Editor-in-Chief.

You can be the next supply chain leader!